Kiko: Hey, what's going on? Is everything all right?

Ripo: No. There's a group of poachers hunting the endangered animals.

Kiko: I don't want to sound pious, but it is up to us to protect the animals!

Ripo: I'm usually timid, but I will muster my courage against this menace. This isn't a mock battle!

Kiko: First, we should remove all the snares so that the animals won't get trapped.

Ripo: Good idea. Then we must be cunning to rid the game reserve of these hunters.

Kiko: We should watch them to learn their movements.

Ripo: After, we can move secretly along their flank and douse them with sugar water.

Kiko: Then we can release a swarm of bees from the hive in our compound.

Ripo: That will teach them a lesson.

Kiko: Let's get supplies from our thatched hut.

Ripo: Maybe we should get some spears that we can brandish if they don't run away.

Kiko: That should scare them. Should we wear some masks too?

Ripo: I think your face is scary enough.

Kiko: Your just envious. Really, jealousy is not your best color.

Ripo: I wouldn't be so haughty if I were you. One day, I'll be chief.

Kiko: Ok, ok. Let's stop with the banter and get down to business.

Ripo: You're right; we have a lesson to teach those poachers!
